SURE, WOMEN HAVE RIGHT TO PREACH!

MRS. LIZZIE McADAMS

Mrs. Lizzie McAdams, evangelist, who with her husband is conducting an evangelistic campaign in their own tent on Parsonage St. in this city says that women have just as much right to preach as men and the only reason Jesus didn't name women among his 12 apostles was because "there were a lot of long tongues in Jerusalem just as there are in this day and time, who would have made a lot of talk about Jesus running around the country with a bunch of women." Mrs. McAdams is sure Jesus named a lot of women among his seventy who were sent abroad. Mrs. McAdams is strong in her convictions as to woman's place in religion. She says women were the last at the cross, the first at the sepulchre and will be the first to cross the threshold of Heaven and make things pleasant and comfortable around the great white throne of God.

Mrs. McAdams has only contempt for those who question a woman's right to preach. She says if a man had four daughters to enter the ministry, the neighbors would all say that the old man's daughters were all crazy. But if the same man had four daughters to turn soubrettes and hire out their bodies at $40 a week to a theatrical manager, the neighbors would say "they were 'awfully cute' and making their mark in the world."

Mrs. McAdams is 37 years old and a native of Alabama. She got religion early in life and was licensed to preach in 1910. She was conducting evangelistic campaigns on her own hook when she met her husband, Rev. H. M. McAdams. The two joined forces and have been doing good team work. They have been in North Carolina about two years. At Mt. Olive, recently they made such a hit that the people of that town made them a present of a brand new tent costing more than a thousand dollars, besides cash contributions running into several hundred dollars. Mrs. McAdams says she likes preaching fine and there is no reason why a woman shouldn't have her say everywhere else. The McAdams' will continue their evangelistic work in Elizabeth City indefinitely.

Young people of either sex should be timely warned of the phenomena of puberty, and thus obviate the utmost shock and alarm such as unprepared children often suffer from. The standards that make us shirk the problem of adolescence is false.

Courage fails the father to talk to his son, and the mother to her daughter. Think of a father who could not speak to his own son of things that will vitally concern his future, but could boisterously laugh at very dubious jokes in the club, in the drug store and in many other places.

Parents often throw the burden upon the teachers in this vastly important matter. A good teacher, of either sex, wants to be useful to the boy and girl, but experience has shown that the teacher will have awaiting him or her serious trouble unless he or she gets definite leave from the parents.

This leave is often not forthcoming. Young people learn things. Who is going to teach them? They will receive false views and wrong conceptions from those who are a little older than them; and the chances are that the "literature" at their disposal is not without taint.

The new interests and powers that dawn in adolescence are misrepresented, as existing for the advantage of the individual, and for the gratification of his lust, as involving no duty to the future.

Certain people will tell us that our teaching on this matter should be repressive. They condemn the new developments of the young life as animal and bestial, as requiring nothing but contempt and subjection.

The advertiser of abominable compounds try to frighten young people regarding developments of the young life, describing what is normal as symptomatic of alarming disease.

Sound the call; assemble the people; and in the name of a sacred charge, of an interest in the future, of a tremendous import of present happiness or unhappiness in the life of young people—the would-be bride and bridegroom, of tomorrow—ask the question: Who is responsible for this greatest defect in our education? Is it the parents, or the teachers, or the clergy, or the doctors?

I believe a co-operation of all four and a special duty of each is needed. The parent must lay the foundation. To answer the questions of childhood honestly, and to warn the young as to

A GREAT DEFECT IN EDUCATION

Dr. Saliba Says Educators and Parents Have Excluded Education in Parenthood

Education is defined as the "provision of an environment," the function of which is, to provide for "complete living."

If we ask what is meant by complete living we find entire disagreement among the educators.

Some of our educators try to turn all boys and girls into classical scholars; some care mainly for their athletic success; some aim at their technical efficiency; others prefer commercial education for them, and so forth.

But, in this welter of conflicting views and aims, almost all our educators exclude the function of parenthood from their idea of complete living.

This is not a protest of which I can claim originality. It was made more than half a century ago by Herbert Spencer. He points out, in his book "Education," "that while educators dispute over the constituents of the curriculum, and the relative importance of classics, mathematics, and so forth, the greatest defect in our educational curriculum is overlooked by every one. We act as if parenthood were unimportant, or required no preparation, or would only fall to the lot of the very few; whereas it is supremely important, is the most difficult task in life, and falls to the lot of very many."

Today, owing to prudishness and folly, blind ignorance is allowed to drift on. Our great idea of the modern best school for girls is the school where the girls are brought up and taught as if they were boys, to demonstrate their equality, in intellect and muscle.

I do not condemn, but rather applaud the motive and effort of devoting all possible skill and care to the nurture of the young, but I positively declare that to abrogate the duty of Parenthood and ignore its place in the ideal of "complete living" is a great crime committed against the future, the race and the state.

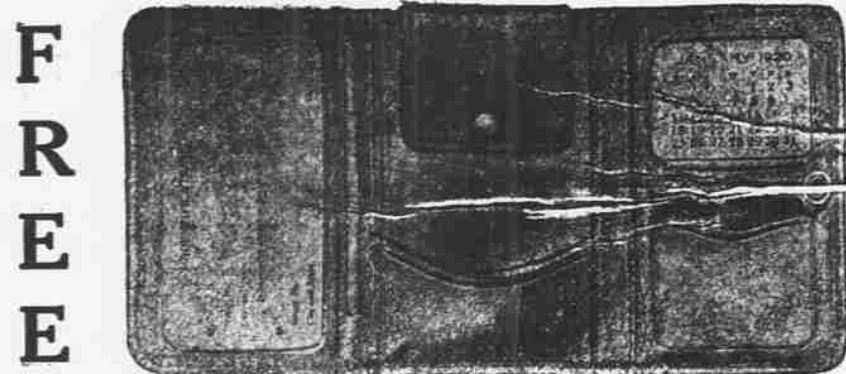

Parental education is needed by all adolescents. If all of them, males and females, do not become parents, they will at least become foster-parents. Parental education may have for its valuable result an interference with marriage and parenthood on the part of those who consider it a duty they owe to the future not to pass on some taint which, even if not apparent in them, is present in the stock to which they belong.

One of the most important functions of motherhood is the choice of the fathers of the future.

A girl marries a drunkard in the hope of "saving" him. It were better for her and the future not to bear a child or that child should die.

One of These Bill Books is Yours Free!

And this is a good one, made of genuine black leather, machine embossed and carefully stitched. It has a big compartment for holding your bills laid flat, the bill compartment secured by a flap and snap fastener. Besides the bill compartment there is a coin pocket, an identification card under transparent celluloid, a pocket for postage stamps, a compartment for tickets and a yearly calendar. Folded, the book fits snugly into any pocket. This newspaper has secured another lot of these bill books and will give one free to every one who remits $1.50 for a year's subscription to this newspaper, new or renewal while the supply lasts. If the book is to be mailed, add 5 cents to your remittance to cover postage. The bill book alone can be supplied for 55 cents. Address
